PHILOSOPHY COURSE OFFERINGS  SUMMER SESSIONS  2005

SUMMER SESSION I

Philosophy 1204: Knowledge and Reality
We will read and discuss the work of some important historical and contemporary philosophers. We will focus on questions such as: What is the nature of reality and the self? How do I know what is real, and what is misleading appearance, error, or illusion? What is knowledge? What is the meaning of life?

Philosophy 1204: Knowledge and Reality
Philosophy is concerned with certain problems and consists, ultimately, in the attempt to provide an answer to these problems. I think that at any given time philosophy must be understood, at least in part, within historical context. There is no way to understand the problems and what is at stake other than by seeing where they come from and why they present themselves at that time in the way that they do. The course is divided into two units. Unit 1: We shall begin with the problem of our knowledge of the the world around us. This problem has dominated the history of philosophy since Descartes. We shall try to understand the special philosophical character of this problem. Unit 2: We shall explore the idea that rationality is the constitutive feature of the mind. We shall be concerned with what the minimal conditions are for attributing a mind to a creature. In this context we shall reflect on the relations between thought, language and the world.
